DEAR COLLEAGUES:

Escape the cold and join us at the ABA Forum on Construction Law's 2025 Midwinter Meeting, Maximizing Returns: Proven Strategies for Project Owners and Developers when we return to sunny Tampa, Florida. The program will be held at the Hilton Downtown Tampa from January 15-17, 2025.

Creating and maintaining the built environment involves a myriad of designers, contractors and stakeholders, but it all begins and ends with the owner. This Program—Episode 2 of our construction trilogy—focuses on critical issues that owners and developers need to consider and have in their execution “playbooks” to set their projects up for success – including being ready when things invariably don’t go according to plan. And because understanding the owner’s perspective is also critical for contractors, design consultants and financing parties, we’ll take a 360-degree view around the owner, looking at strategies for all project participants to “own” their roles for better outcomes.

Our Program will kick-off with an in-depth discussion on how projects are green-lit from Tampa-based owners and developers from Tampa International Airport, DeBartolo Development, and Strategic Property Partners – the group developing the vibrant Water Street Tampa project that we hope you take the opportunity to visit. Other sessions will include discussions on:

- The best dispute resolution tools for an owner
- Condominiums and the changing legal landscape in the wake of the Surfside tragedy
- Sources of project financing and how to acquire and maintain them
- Post-construction issues and understanding the operations and maintenance phase of a project

Join us outside for our Welcome Reception where the Latin culture and history of Tampa will be on full display. Additionally, Professor Homer C. La Rue will join us for our traditional Diversity Breakfast to discuss the work that he and others at the Ray Corollary Initiative are doing to expand diversity in dispute resolution: an important mission and good reminder as we celebrate Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.’s birthday.

CO-SPONSORED BY:

And after the education ends, make plans for a guided tour through Tampa’s historic Ybor City neighborhood sampling food and beverages along the way.

Whether for the thought-provoking topics, highly regarded speakers, networking opportunities, or warm weather, come spend the long January holiday weekend with your Forum friends in Tampa. We hope to see you there!

Construction Management for the Owner – How to Augment Your Project Team! CM's, Program Managers, Owner's Representatives

This session will examine the types of construction management resources that are commonly engaged to augment the Owner's team (including owner's representatives, contract administrators, project managers and program managers). It will feature a lively discussion of factors Owners should consider in selecting the best project delivery method for the Owner's Team, including what potential construction management resources will best fit their overall goals. Topics will include qualifications and skillsets owners should consider when retaining an owner's representative, as well as best practices for communications protocols and collaboration tools (e.g., use of project clouds, shared web sites, and pm/cm tools) they can implement during the overall process. Lastly the panelists will discuss potential claims and defenses that can be asserted in disputes involving owner's representatives and/or PM/CM firms.

Plenary 3

Dispute Review Boards and Other Instruments in the Owner's Dispute Avoidance Tool Kit

The owner – perhaps more than any other project participant – is highly motivated to avoid disputes and the added costs and project slowdown that accompany them. How can owners adopt new ADR methods to more proactively manage (and hopefully, resolve) disputes in real-time during the course of a project? Two seasoned construction attorneys will share their decades of experience on how owners can effectively leverage Dispute Review Boards (DRBs) to mitigate the risk that disputes will delay or, worse, derail their projects. They will address how DRBs work in practice and discuss what considerations need to be made to evaluate whether they are right for a project and how best to leverage them for success.

Strategies for Protecting the Project and its Participants – Insurance and Bonding Programs

Our panelists, veterans of construction and insurance coverage litigation, including lawsuits arising out of the tragic collapse of Champlain Towers in Surfside, Florida, will explore the best strategies for developing an insurance and surety bonding program to protect the project and its participants. Best practices will describe numerous concepts successfully used by owner/developers, including the status of project policies, corporate practice policies, subcontractor policies, and issues specific to towers of insurance coverage. The panelists will also provide advice on how to handle insurance issues and the various duties of the different actors involved when high-exposure lawsuits arise with lessons learned from actual construction projects.

Plenary 7

Post Construction / Operations and Maintenance of a Completed Project

Once the facility has been built and turned over to the Owner how does the Owner operate and maintain its new capital asset to maximize its value and longevity? Typically, much focus is made on the contracts for the design and construction of a capital project, which is carried out and managed by trained construction professionals, but what happens post-construction?

This session will discuss how contract provisions that form the AIA Standard Agreements for Facility Management F Series Documents incorporated best practices, and compare aspects of the AIA documents to other tailored forms of contract. Topics will also include consideration of maintenance issues during design, close-out issues, awareness of warranty issues, training requirements, unique issues related to elevators and other specialized equipment, budgets/financing, and how lawyers can support the owner's operations and asset management team, who often have different skill sets and objectives than construction personnel.

Robin Zeidel, Zeidel & Associates P.C. | Rye Brook, NY

11:30 – 12:30 P.M.

Plenary 8

Attorney Client Privilege & Interactions with Third-Party Consultants (Ethics)

Owners wear several hats and sometimes it's a challenge to keep all the discussions and communications compartmentalized. Our panel will present an ethics-focused session on the implications of an owner's communications with its in-house counsel, how to establish and maintain the attorney-client privilege with third parties (architects, engineers, OPMs), risks of waiver, and best practices for collateral issues such as litigation holds. Topics may include dual-purpose (legal and business) attorney-client communications with in-house counsel, pitfalls (including potential waiver) in sharing external counsel's advice within the owner's organization, and best practices for managing these concerns.
